Artifact Teaching Keil Hileman KeilH@usd232.org

Brain research suggests:

Movement helps participants stay awake and focused.

Person-to-person conversation leads to better understanding.

Visuals can/should be used as triggers to recall key content.

Music, used properly, can be a significant tool for training and learning.

Memory strategies instantly boost understanding and test scores.

Effective directions are the key to successful group activities.

Novelty intrigues the mind and fires curiosity.

Relevance makes learning real, improving engagement.

Learning is always emotional - positive or negative!

'Homework' rarely improves training outcomes. (Really!)
